

Stores closed at six.

There are two ways of getting rid of slow-selling stuff that stands in the way of quick goods: mark it down and take the loss like a man, or (the usual way) pay the salesman a quarter—or half-dollar—and sell it at full price.

That is: pay him to recommend to customers what you want sold, not what the customer ought to have. Pay him to put everybody's interest ahead of the interest of the person he is professing to serve—what a pernicious practice to salesman, to customer, to merchant!

Premium-taking salesman, you don't like this advertisement? And yet you know enough about the premium scheme to feel unwonted security in a store where premiums have no place.

Clothes, shoes, hats, furnishings, and your money back if you want it.
